Ashland, MA, in Middlesex county, is 2 miles SouthWest of Framingham, MA and 21 miles West of Boston, conveniently located inside the Boston metropolitan area.

Before the area that is today known as Ashland, settled in the early 1700s, it was inhabited by the Megunco Indians. The region is considerably newer than many of the surrounding towns. The foundation of the Boston to Albany railroad in the mid 1800s factored in the early development of Ashland, but it remained a mainly centralized residential town with limited industry until the mid 20th century.
